A Town Hall Meeting to Discuss Alternative Uses for the Center City Golf Course Site

The City of Oceanside is considering alternative uses for the 75-acre Center City Golf Course site.

In support of this initiative, the City is hosting a “town meeting” to obtain input from citizens concerning desired uses for the property. The meeting will provide information about the work that is currently underway and an opportunity to make suggestions and express concerns.

All are welcome to attend.

Planning staff has retained a consultant to assist the City in its review of possible uses. The consultant’s task includes researching the financial implications of a limited range of land-use alternatives. The study is the first step in a process that is likely to include future planning steps and other activities before recommendations go before the City Council for action. Staff from the project consultant, Economics Research Associates, will attend the meeting as observers.
